UNIFY SOUTH ASIA REALITY PROJECT

THE EXPEDITION

Unify South Asia Reality Project (USARP) team explores successful social movements through history. The USARP, co-founded and led by the Council for South Asian Relations, Citizens for Justice, groups of forward looking South Asians and international volunteers, are dedicated to unleashing a global social, economic, political, military and cultural movement demanding action on bringing peace within SOUTH ASIA. Despite overwhelming international consensus on the strategic importance of SOUTH ASIA, the global community still lacks the resolve to implement meaningful solutions to bring lasting peace and unity to the region. The Unify South Asia Reality Project exists to forge unwavering bedrock of impassioned support necessary for urgent action. With that foundation, together we will ignite the moral courage in our leaders to initiate the Unify SOUTH ASIA reality project.

"Where there is Unity
There is always a Victory"
- Publilius Syrus

If a united South Asia could work in the past then it could work in the present too. The growing number of young educated South Asians no longer care about the nationalistic, ethnic and religious boundaries of the past and are ready to embrace the new future which can enable them to be at par with their western counterparts. Every South Asian wants to address common external threats and internal issues like standardization, taxation, good governance and foreign policy. The South Asians people have a need for their region to come under one political and economical system. Transitioning back to its pre-independence borders may pose initial challenges but unifying the Indian subcontinent is possible, as the people of this region already share a similar culture, taste in movies and music, spiritual values, sporting and political role models, Customs, cuisines, trade values, and consensus on family upbringing.

The Unify South Asia Reality Project employs cutting-edge communications and grassroots engagement tools to break the dam of inaction and raise the profile of the SOUTH ASIAN crisis to its proper state of urgency. Armed with the support of a global movement more than 5 million strong and a grassroots network of empowered SOUTH ASIAN Leaders trained by leading experts and think tank groups. USARP stands up to denial, press for solutions, and spread the truth about SOUTH ASIAN change.

OUR INITIATIVES

THE UNIFY SOUTH ASIA REALITY PROJECT

Just like in pre-independence, India was a unified global superpower with a huge market and a renowned intellectual powerhouse. Hence To see that vision revisited again it is imperative to have an intellectual, scientific, economic, arts, athletic and political perspective on what would it take to have a South Asian Union such as NAFTA and EU.

HOPE IN ACTION

- Team-building outings for corporations
- Annual gala to raise funds
- Societal actions among Member States
- Clean water in South Asia
- Access to Energy for All
- Farmers Initiative Program

OUR HISTORY

The South-Asian population encompasses people that trace their origins to the Indian Subcontinent, a peninsular region of Asia separated from the mainland by the Himalaya mountain chain. Although this region includes the countries of India, Pakistan, and Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Nepal, Bhutan, Maldives, Tibet, Myanmar, and even Afghanistan, the definition is generally simplified to include just India, Pakistan, and Bangladesh, which historically formed the whole of British India. Already it is evident that this region has a very diverse make-up. Both across and within countries, South Asia is home to a wide array of cultures, languages, ethnicities, and religions.

Based on current studies, the genetic history of the region shows a great variety of ancestral origins among the peoples of the Indian subcontinent. Specifically, South Asians can belong to one of thee racial groups: Caucasoid, Australoid and Mongoloid. This is especially interesting given that most countries have native populations stemming from one racial group. The racial populations are distinguished primarily by geographical location. The Caucasoids are concentrated in the North and the Australoids are focused in the South – explaining the well-known disparity in the disparity between the populations of North and South India.

Meanwhile, the Mongoloids are located in the North-eastern part of the subcontinent. Besides these racial differences, the peoples of South Asia have a diverse linguistic history. Given its history as a British colony, English is well-recognized across South Asia. However, the national languages of India, Pakistan, and Bangladesh are Hindi, Urdu, and Bengali, respectively. Among these, Hindi and Urdu could be considered the same language, distinguished only by socio-political constraints. However, there are over 1952 mother tongues, of which only 15 being specified in the eight Schedule of the Constitution.

Furthermore, along side such ethno-linguistic diversity, South Asia is home to adherents of many different religions. Although the majority of the South Asian population is Hindu, there is a large Islamic population and smaller, but significant, populations of Buddhists, Sikhs, and Christians. There are also smaller communities that adhere to less common religions, such as Jainism, Zoroastrianism, and others.
